46. Read the following passage and then answer the question:

We often say that children are our future; we must cultivate the voices of children if they are to have anything to say. They must learn how to communicate with themselves and others. They must learn how not to be afraid to take a risk with an idea. To speak up for what they believe in and to question norms or arguments presented to them in a meaningful and purposeful way.

I tell my students they are philosophers: if you allow yourself to think freely, to use parts of other's perspectives to gain your own, by having a voice and cultivating that individuality, then you are a philosopher. Do not be intimidated by those who seem to have the answers - you have answers, too. You are an individual with ideas. You can agree or disagree with someone else. You can read others' thoughts and decide which parts to make your own, and which parts to respond vehemently against.

When we accept we are philosophers, we are no longer afraid to speak up in class. We are no longer afraid to share an opinion. This is a wonderful effect of conceptual learning. Students are empowered to come to conclusions and create ideas that they share through writing and speaking, using the skills and content of your course.

We often say that children are our future; we must cultivate the voices of children if they are to have anything to say. They must learn how to communicate with themselves and others. They must learn how not to be afraid to take a risk with an idea. To speak up for what they believe in and to question norms or arguments presented to them in a meaningful and purposeful way.

I tell my students they are philosophers: if you allow yourself to think freely, to use parts of other's perspectives to gain your own, by having a voice and cultivating that individuality, then you are a philosopher. Do not be intimidated by those who seem to have the answers - you have answers, too. You are an individual with ideas. You can agree or disagree with someone else. You can read others' thoughts and decide which parts to make your own, and which parts to respond vehemently against.

When we accept we are philosophers, we are no longer afraid to speak up in class. We are no longer afraid to share an opinion. This is a wonderful effect of conceptual learning. Students are empowered to come to conclusions and create ideas that they share through writing and speaking, using the skills and content of your course.

One of these is an effect of conceptual learning :

(2) lack of ideas
(3) not responding vehemently
(4) fearless sharing of opinion
